

Telling a Truth or Telling a Lie?

You know in order to watch TV your room has to be clean first. You push everything under your bed. When your mother asks if your room is clean you say that it is.

You don't want to play with a boy in your class. He calls one day and asks you to come over and play. You tell him that you are busy because you have to practice the piano.

You take one of your little sister's toys away from her, and she starts to cry. When you hear your grandmother coming, you quickly give the toy back, but your little sister will not stop crying. Your grandmother asks you why your sister is crying. You tell her that you took her toy, but you gave it back.

You accidentally break a lamp when playing with a ball in the living room. When your mother comes in to see what made the noise, you tell her that it was your fault, but it was because you were walking through the living room, and accidentally tripped and knocked it over.

You see a plate of cookies on the table. You take one for yourself and give one to your little brother. When your mother comes to take the cookies to her friend, she sees your brother eating a cookie and starts to scold him. You don't say anything.

Your father asks you to hurry to the store to get some medicine that he needs for his cold, and he gives you the money. On the way to the store, a neighbor sees you and asks you to mail some letters for her. You go to the store and buy the medicine for your father. On the way home, you pass by a friend's house, and he has a new bike, and he lets you ride it. When you get home, your father is angry with you for being late, and you tell him that it was because you mailed the letters for the neighbor.

Your mother tells you that you may play when your chores are done. You do everything except make your bed. Your friend calls and asks if you can come over and play. Your mother asks you if all your chores are done. You reply, "Yes, well, almost everything. I can make my bed when I get home."

Your brother has an amazing building brick set that you aren't allowed to play with. When your brother is gone to school, you sneak into his room and play with it and have a great time. When you are finished, you forget to put all the bricks back the way they were. When your brother gets home, he is mad and asks you if you played with his bricks. You say that you did, and you are sorry, and what can you do to make it up to him?
